U.S. Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson speaks Wednesday.

New rules for being stuck on a plane

Associated Press

WASHINGTON A federal task force approved voluntary guidelines Wednesday for airlines and airports dealing with passengers stranded for hours on the tarmac but produced no fixed limit on how long they can be delayed before being allowed to leave planes.

Passengers who had hoped for stronger protections were left empty-handed by the guidelines.

"You have to admit that the game is still heavily weighted to business as usual," Kate Hanni, a passenger rights advocate, said before voting against adoption of the report.

Task force member Daniel Rutenberg of the International Airline Passengers Association also expressed disappointment at the lack of "time-specific triggers" for allowing passengers to return to the gates and appealed to Transportation Secretary Mary Peters to address the issue.

Task force chairman Sam Podberesky said the department is working separately on a rule that will require airlines and airports to have contingency plans and include a time limit.

The task force report recommends that:

- » Airlines update passengers delayed on tarmacs every 15 minutes even if there is nothing new to report.
- » A secure room be provided for passengers from diverted overseas flights so they can avoid having to go through security checks when reboarding an aircraft to their final destination.
- » When practical, refreshments and entertainment should be made available to passengers confined aboard aircraft awaiting takeoff.
- » Airlines should make reasonable efforts to be keep airplane restrooms usable.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON The government has abandoned the original centerpiece of its $700 billion rescue effort for the financial system and will not use the money to purchase troubled bank assets.

Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson said Wednesday that the administration will continue to use $250 billion of the program to purchase stock in banks as a way to bolster their balance sheets and encourage them to resume more normal lending. He also announced that the administration was looking at a major expansion of the program into the markets that provide support for credit card debt, auto loans and student loans.

Paulson said 40 percent of U.S. consumer credit is provided through selling securities that are backed by pools of auto loans and other such debt. He said these markets

CAR FIX?

On the issue of using the $700 billion bailout package to provide help to ailing auto companies, Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson said the administration preferred an approach that would accelerate support to that industry from other legislation Congress passed this fall. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid are pushing for something more sweeping, including considering "emergency and limited financial assistance."

need support.

"This market, which is vital for lending and growth, has for all practical purposes ground to a halt," Paulson said.

The announcement marked a major shift for the administration which had talked about purchasing only troubled assets as it lobbied Congress to pass the massive bailout bill.

"Our financial system remains fragile in the face of an economic downturn here and abroad," Paulson said. "Market turmoil will not abate until the biggest part of the housing correction is behind us. Our primary focus must be recovery and repair."

The Bush administration already has committed $250 billion of the $700 billion rescue fund for the purchase of bank stock. On Monday, the administration announced that it was allocating another $40 billion as an investment in troubled insurance giant AIG.

Those decisions leave only $60 billion of the initial $350 billion left to allocate. To access the second $350 billion, this administration or the next will have to make a request to Congress for the money.

The morning after the election was even better.
Everyone

a little kinder,
a little more willing to explore our common ground.

Let the good times keep rolling

What a glorious week and a half it's been here in Chicago since Barack Obama was elected president and the Obama girls got the dog my parents would never let me have.

In terms of citywide jubilation, the only time I can remember Chicagoans more ecstatic was when Macy's announced they'd keep selling Frango Mints.

The city's good mood began at the Grant Park rally, which thousands flocked to for the only chance most of us will ever get to mill around for hours and enjoy doing it. "Let's go stand in that spot! And after we get there, let's go to another spot!"

My wife even made some cash on election night. She knew she couldn't compete with the Obama T-shirt vendors, but she set up a modest table at the corner of Michigan Avenue and Jackson Boulevard to sell some sweater vests she'd knitted with Joe Biden's face on them. Made 50 bucks and only spent $75 on materials.

The morning after the election was even better. Everyone here seemed a little kinder, a little more willing to explore our common ground. You noticed it in the way bike messengers would stop to help the people they ran over in the Loop, the way humans and squirrels would share their nuts, the way readers would forgive columnists for not coming up with a third example.

As Thursday rolled around, I feared that the euphoria of the campaign and the victory might begin to recede into the past, so to prolong it I headed to Indiana to do a little more canvassing. Think I picked up three additional votes for Obama.

Upon my return to Chicago, I was delighted to see the enthusiasm for the president-elect and our city's role in his ascent hadn't abated. At least not at the Tribune Tower, where people still were lined up at the Tribune Store for commemorative copies of Wednesday's paper, impeding my ability to buy my daily commemorative Junior Mints.

If President-elect Obama accomplishes nothing other than rescuing a sagging newspaper industry, I'll have to consider his presidency a success. (Incidentally, don't forget to buy this Sunday's Tribune; there will be a commemorative Obama pullout section featuring full-color photographs of people buying last Sunday's commemorative Obama pullout section.)

Today, more than a week after the election, spirits remain high. The other day the Secret Service leaped out of a car and pointed guns at a Chicagoan who tried to cut off President-elect Obama's motorcade—and everyone just laughed about it later. Some of us were even envious. I don't think I was the only one who thought, "I wish Obama's Secret Service would point guns at me."

Meanwhile, people from out of town keep asking, "What's it like to be there?" And the only answer is: "It's great." But my fear is that the feeling can't possibly last. That as winter descends upon us and the Obama family and everyone else in Hyde Park except Bill Ayers moves to Washington, D.C., the rest of us in Chicago will retreat to our old splintered ways.

If only this town had a good community organizer.

$11 million settlements in Metra derailment

'05 crash killed 2 women

Associated Press

Metra will pay $11 million to settle two wrongful death lawsuits stemming from a 2005 derailment, under a settlement approved by a Cook County judge Wednesday.

College student Jane Cuthbert, 22, of Oak Forest, and research technician Allison Walsh, 38, of New Lenox, were killed in September 2005 when a train traveling from Joliet to Chicago derailed while changing tracks.

Investigators with the National Transportation Safety Board and Metra concluded that human error was the cause of the accident. The train was traveling about 70 mph, but signals directed the engineer to slow to 10 mph before it got to the crossover.

The train's engineer, who was fired in 2006, later admitted fault.

More than 80 others were injured in the accident, and dozens of lawsuits charging negligence were filed.

At least 35 are pending, according to Corboy & Demetrio, the Chicago law firm handling the bulk of the cases.

Trials for both Cuthbert and Walsh's lawsuits had been expected to begin later this year. Their deaths were the only two aboard commuter trains in Metra's 25-year history, according to Metra spokeswoman Judy Pardonnet.

"Our heartfelt sympathy goes out to the family of these young women," she said. "We believe this to be a tragic loss."

Since the accident, Metra has instituted more training and upgraded technology; for example, engineers have to undergo more training time with simulators, Pardonnet said.

Cuthbert's family will receive $6 million and Walsh's family will receive $5 million in the settlement, in which Metra admits fault.

Cuthbert was a student at the University of Illinois at Chicago and was headed to the downtown Chicago campus for a training session for volunteers who teach English as a second language.

Walsh, who worked as a biologic-genetic research technician at the Brookfield Zoo, was on her way to make a presentation at a conference for the Association of Zoos and Aquariums at a Chicago hotel.

E2 charges dropped

Associated Press

More than a year after a judge acquitted three men of criminal charges in the 2003 stampede at E2 nightclub that left 21 people dead, prosecutors on Wednesday dismissed the same charges against the last defendant.

Prosecutors said at a hearing that they couldn't proceed with the case against Dwain Kyles because of an appellate court's decision to uphold a judge's ruling not to allow what they called key evidence.

"Due to the appellate court's ruling, we had insufficient evidence to proceed with the criminal case against Dwain Kyles," said Tandra Simonton, spokeswoman for the Cook County state's attorney's office.

The dismissal brings to a quiet end prosecutors' efforts to hold someone criminally responsible for the deaths of patrons who were trapped and crushed in a stairwell at E2. The victims rushed into the passage-

THE BACKGROUND

The Feb. 17, 2003, stampede at E2 nightclub, in which 21 were killed and more than 50 others were injured, helped trigger efforts to step up nightclub safety measures.

way after someone used pepper spray to break up a fight inside the club.

Kyles, one of the club's owners, along with another owner, the club's manager and a party promoter, were charged with involuntary manslaughter.

Kyles was scheduled to stand trial at the same time as the other men, until a judge issued the ruling against prosecutors, prompting them to delay prosecution to file an appeal.

Judge Dennis Porter ruled that prosecutors could not introduce as evidence a Housing Court order that required E2 to close because of code violations. He said the order was vague and that no link could be made between the decision to disregard the order and the deaths.

A jury was to hear the case against Kyles at the same time Porter was to decide the fate of the other three. Prosecutors appealed the judge's decision, even as they continued with the trial of the others.

Several weeks later, Porter acquitted club owner Calvin Hollins Jr., his son and club manager Calvin Hollins III and party promoter Marco Flores. In July, an appellate court upheld Porter's ruling.

Prosecutors all but acknowledged that without the Housing Court order they could not proceed, filing at the time of Porter's ruling a "certificate of substantial impairment" with the judge.

On Wednesday, Kyles said he was "relieved" that prosecutors had dropped the charges.

"Only in America could this kind of result, I think, come after such significant media coverage that would suggest that I was guilty," he told reporters outside the courtroom. "But my heart really does remain broken for the families."

The charges never should have been brought in the first place because none of the defendants broke the law, said Kyles' attorney Tommy Brewer.

Prosecutors "knew years ago they didn't have a case," Brewer said.

Meanwhile, there are several lawsuits from family members of victims that are pending.

Cabdrivers threaten to strike

With gas prices reversing course, even Chicagoans without cars will see relief this week as the fuel surcharge added to cab fares this year is removed Friday.

But for cabdrivers, the falling price of gas is a bittersweet break. Some say the loss of the surcharge, added in April and tied to average gas prices in the area, will aggravate the financial stress they are already experiencing in a struggling economy.

On Wednesday, one cabdriver-advocacy group announced plans to hold a strike during the holiday season, saying its demands to negotiate a fare increase have gone unanswered.

“It’s time to address our needs,” said Faye Khazindar, chairman of the United Taxi Driver Community Council. The council, which said it has already collected more than 3,000 pledges from cabdrivers who said they will join the strike, has been asking in recent months for a 16 percent fare increase. The proposal also would raise the base cost of a cab ride—taken at the “flag pull”—from $2.25 to $3.

Cabdrivers said the proposed increase would help offset the loss of the fuel surcharge, which fell from $1 to 50 cents at the end of October and will be eliminated Friday, after Chicago gas prices fell below $2.70.

Khazindar said the strike will be called off if the city agrees to begin negotiating a fare increase immediately.

But Norma Reyes, commissioner of the Chicago Department of Consumer Services, said the department is already considering a fare increase for next year, and city officials have been holding monthly discussions with several cabdriver groups.

“The UTCC [cabdrivers council] does not represent all 15,000 taxi drivers. They represent only a very small percentage,” Reyes said. “If they feel they need to go on strike, I can’t stop them. But the city will be ready if that’s what they want to do.”

Reward for missing teen

A $10,000 reward was offered Wednesday for information on the whereabouts of a Chicago firefighter’s missing daughter, 15-year-old Tisha Muentes.

Although Muentes’ father, Fabian, said Wednesday he has not heard from his daughter, a Chicago police spokesman said, “we believe there has been contact between this missing teen and known acquaintances.”

Muentes said the girl’s grandfather received a call late Tuesday from a crying girl, but he said there were no words spoken and the number did not match his daughter’s cell phone number. He said police told him her cell phone has not been used since she was reported missing.

The police spokesman, John Mirabelli, said he could not give out further information about the police search, but said the investigation was progressing.

Earlier Wednesday, volunteers handed out fliers at Halsted Street and Dickens Avenue, down the street from Lincoln Park High School, where Tisha was headed Monday morning.

And real estate mogul Fred Latsko, a resident of the 43rd Ward, in which the high school is located, put up the reward “in hopes that Ms. Muentes can be found safely as quickly as possible,” stated a news release from the office of Ald. Vi Daley (43rd).

Tisha, a sophomore at Lincoln Park, was last seen leaving her grandparents’ home Monday. She called a friend at 7:20 a.m. Monday, saying she was on a Halsted bus on her way to school, her dad said. Her parents said she never showed up at school that day.

Tisha was last seen wearing a light brown, furry coat that was big for her. She was wearing jeans and a beige scarf and gloves.

Anyone who may have seen Muentes may call 773-410-6611 or 773-791-8473.

A climb into the record books

Next time you find yourself grumbling about a broken elevator, consider Nick Wirsching.

On Sunday, the 22-year-old West Chicago man climbed the stairs at the Sears Tower four times—that’s 8,436 steps—voluntarily.

The feat set a record for the Damon Runyon Cancer Research Foundation, which hosts the Go Vertical Chicago event every year as a cancer research fundraiser.

“It’s an extreme event,” said Katie Levine, director of development for the foundation. “But he wasn’t out of breath, he wasn’t winded.”

Wirsching—an extreme sports lover who has jumped into frigid Lake Michigan with a Polar Bear Club and traveled from Chicago to Mackinac Island by sailboat regatta—says he did the 103 flights once and decided to just keep on going.

“I climbed to the top, and thought, ‘You know, really, I’ve got nothing else to do,’” said Wirsching.

And guess what? He did all four climbs wearing Crocs.

Peterson ruling on hold

Authorities used “vindictive and selective” prosecution in their gun case against former Bolingbrook Police Sgt. Drew Peterson, his legal team argued Wednesday. Peterson, 54, faces felony gun charges for allegedly possessing a modified assault rifle with a barrel of less than 16 inches in violation of state law. Judge Richard Schoenstedt, who was battling a cold and losing his voice, said he would defer his ruling until the next scheduled hearing on Nov. 20.

2 hurt in River North crash

Two people were hurt Wednesday following a three-vehicle crash that sent a van into a River North building. One of the victims was from the van and the other victim came from one of the other two vehicles, fire officials said. The crash occurred about 11:15 a.m. at Grand Avenue and Wells Street, according to Richard Rosado, a Fire Department spokesman. He said the van crashed into a building with businesses at the ground level and residences above.

Man dies, refuses to leave dog

A Cicero man died early Wednesday after refusing to leave his burning house with his beloved dog inside. John Petrik, 68, lived alone with his 13-year-old German shepherd mix Regis in the single-family home in the 1600 block of South Lombard Avenue. Officials said police had to forcibly remove him, and Petrik suffered some sort of medical emergency in a police squad car.

Cause of man’s death in lockup unclear

An autopsy performed Wednesday on a 52-year-old man who was found dead in a holding cell in a South Loop police station was inconclusive, according to the Cook County medical examiner’s office. Rafe McMullen, whose last known address was in the 2900 block of South State Street, was found unresponsive in the Central District lockup about 4 a.m. Wednesday, officials said.

The White House comes with these benefits

Planes

Two 747s serve the president. Only one at any time is known as Air Force One—in fact, any plane carrying the president is Air Force One on that trip. But there are two based at Andrews Air Force Base. He takes one of them on every domestic trip. And both of them fly on foreign trips, part security decoy, part staff conveyance.

FLIGHT FOOD

The Air Force runs a respectable mess in the galley at the back of the aircraft, tailoring the menu to the president's desires.

» Laura Bush loves avocados, and they put avocados in everything they serve when she's aboard, even the BLTs.

OTHER PLANES

When the first lady flies on her own, she gets a 737 in a similar color scheme. The plane alternately serves the vice president or secretary of state on their trips.

Travel

The president has a ticket to see the world. In addition to whatever foreign trips he takes of his own initiative, there are at least three on the regular annual agenda:

GROUP OF EIGHT SUMMIT

Location rotates each year among G-8 members: the U.S., Britain, France, Germany, Canada, Russia, Italy and Japan.

ASIA-PACIFIC ECONOMIC COOPERATION FORUM

Rotates among the 23 Pacific Rim nations, from Australia to Japan and down the South American coast.

NATO SUMMIT

Annually in Europe.

Motorcade

There are two identical missile-proof black Cadillac limos with indestructible truck tires on them, again, one serving as decoy in the motorcade.

The motorcade generally runs 15 vehicles long, with the two limos, several SUVs full of heavily armed Secret Service agents, a communications truck, hazardous materials truck, ambulance, media vans, staff vans, etc.

OVERSEAS

The vehicles in the motorcade are flown to places where the president travels—there is a separate "car plane," a military transport, that ferries the vehicles.

Helicopters

The president has access to a fleet of helicopters, known as Marine One, again depending on which one the president is on. The white-topped fleet flies three at a time when the president is on board one, the other two landing as decoys. The Marines have a contract out to replace the old fleet with a modern, very expensive one.

Camp David

The presidential retreat in the woods atop the Catoctin Mountains in Maryland is about one hour north of Washington by car but usually reached by helicopter. At roughly 1,500 feet in elevation, it features a beautiful run of woods with vistas of surrounding areas. It opened with the name Shangri-La, but Eisenhower thought better of that, renaming it Camp David.

Elevator

A paneled and mirrored private elevator in the residence, manned by a fellow who tells select visitors: Welcome to the presidential elevator.

» Mark Silva—I rode it with my elderly mother, at Bush's insistence, at the last White House Christmas party.

Cuisine

A fully staffed kitchen, with a head chef, a pastry chef and more. The White House Mess, in the basement of the West Wing, is a men's club-like restaurant with paneling and service by a formally attired Navy staff, which runs the mess in two shifts for lunch. Navy bean soup is a specialty.

Newspapers

Each morning, the Bushes have several papers delivered, which they like to read in bed.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Recreation

A putting green on the South Lawn; a gym in the White House; and the circular drive on the South Lawn is rubberized for aerobic walking. The pool came out years ago to make way for the media briefing room in the West Wing.

Expenses

$100,000 is given each term for decoration of the residence and the Oval Office. The First Family also can set up an outside fund through the White House Historical Association to help cover additional costs.

White House wings

The president gets the West Wing, where the Oval Office is, with a view of the Rose Garden. Also in the West Wing: his top staff, usually about 18 assistants to the president. The first lady gets the East Wing, on the opposite end of the residence—both wings extend from the White House, which is a residence only. She has a nice office with several staff assistant offices.

Hall, next to a statue commemorating the Amistad slave ship's struggle for freedom, less than two hours after a judge made gay marriage a reality in Connecticut.

Despite the roaring traffic and clicking cameras, "It was surprisingly quiet," Oliveira said after the brief ceremony. "Everything else dissolved, and it was just the two of us. It was so much more personal and powerful in us committing to one another, and so much less about the people around us."

The Connecticut Supreme Court ruled 4-3 on Oct. 10 that same-sex couples have the right to wed rather than accept a 2005 civil union law designed to give them the same rights as married couples. A lower-court judge entered a final order permitting same-sex marriage Wednesday morning.

You're so ugly, but so what?

7 BRUSSELS There's hope again for homely hazelnuts, misshapen mushrooms and grotesque garlic. Not to mention those onions that are unsightly enough to bring tears to your eyes.

The European Union on Wednesday chopped 100 pages of rules and regulations that pave the way next summer to allow the sale of fruits and vegetables that may be crooked, bent or twisted—but otherwise good enough to eat.

So those beastly Brussels sprouts, curvy cukes and knobbly carrots are no longer on the outs.

The EU ban, imposed more than 20 years ago to ensure uniform shapes and sizes for fruits and vegetables, has triggered much ridicule. The tabloid media have long used it to highlight bureaucrats' desire to regulate every nook and cranny of Europeans' lives.

MLS EASTERN CONFERENCE FINAL FIRE VS. COLUMBUS CREW

Common goal

After earlier turmoil, Fire's Conde key to team's success

Chicago Tribune

Fire players swarmed the northwest corner of the Toyota Park field immediately after the team took a 2-0 lead against the New England Revolution in last Thursday's playoff game.

Bakary Soumare covered much of the group with his long, outstretched arms, Cuauhtemoc Blanco attempted to climb onto Soumare's back, and a fan attempting to join the celebration was chased away by security.

In the center of the pile was the goal scorer, Wilman Conde—the unlikely hero.

On a sunny Florida afternoon in February, Conde watched from the sideline as his team faced Toronto FC in a preseason match. He sat on a water cooler, apart from his teammates. He said little during the match, and little was said to him.

Four days earlier, Conde had sent an e-mail to reporters stating he wanted to be traded to the New York Red Bulls. Conde wrote that he wanted to be reunited with ex-Fire coach Juan Carlos Osorio, who left the Fire to coach the Red Bulls in December.

The Fire refused to budge, and Conde remained with the team he said he wanted to leave.

Conde began the 2008 season as a substitute after establishing himself as one of the league's best defenders at the end of the 2007 season. Although Fire coach Denis Hamlett claimed otherwise, Conde believes the benching was punishment for his public trade request.

"That's the only way to look at it," Conde said. "I always wanted to play, but they wanted to show me that what I did was wrong."

His relationship with teammates deteriorated during the season. According to several players, Conde frequently made himself out to be the victim and complained to anyone who would listen, prompting teammates to question how much they could count on him.

"Everyone was pretty disappointed with him," fellow defender Gonzalo Segares said. "Even I lost my confidence in him."

Things hit a boiling point in late June. Conde and Blanco came to blows in the locker room and needed to be separated.

"It was a small misunderstanding," Conde said. "I wasn't playing, I had a thousand things in my head, and some words were said. Blanco is a great friend of mine—it was no big deal."

Segares believes the incident may have helped clear the air.

"Sometimes we joke around, and for some guys it's not the best day to joke," Segares said. "That's probably what it was."

Conde has been a starter with the Fire since July and has helped lead a dominant defense that allowed the second fewest goals in Major League Soccer. The Fire faces the Columbus Crew in Thursday's Eastern Conference final, and Conde hopes the season ends with an MLS Cup title for the team.

What happens after that is anyone's guess.

Conde has two years left on a contract that pays him $163,500 per season. He hasn't ruled out a return to the Fire and said he will sit down with Fire technical director Frank Klopas after the season. Klopas has repeatedly said he would like Conde to return.

Conde said there were offers to return to Colombia in the middle of this season but the Fire wouldn't let him go. He hopes the organization will allow him to leave if there are offers from Mexico or Europe in the off-season.

"A soccer player's career is short," Conde said. "I'm in the prime of my career and need to take advantage of it as long as I can."

It's unclear if all his teammates feel the same way. Conde says he respects every one of his teammates' views regardless of where they stand with him.

"If they were for me, against me or neutral, it didn't matter," Conde said. "We're a family, and it showed against New England."

The Whiz Quiz

Think you know your stuff? Test your sports smarts against RedEye's prognosticating pooch Whizzer. How many times have the Fire and Crew met in previous postseasons? Text "quiz" and the number of your answer to 47383. I'll text ya back to tell you if you got the answer right or wrong.

HEAD TO HEAD Playing the field

The Fire's Cuauhtemoc Blanco says he doesn't see the similarities between him and the Columbus Crew's Guillermo Barros Schelotto, whom he will face in Thursday's Eastern Conference final. As for Schelotto, he says of Blanco, "We play the same position, but we each have our own style." While there are differences between the two 35-year-old creative playmakers, it's hard to ignore the similarities.

T.O. plays the write way

Dallas Cowboys receiver Terrell Owens is making the media rounds to promote his new children's book, appropriately titled "Little T Learns to Share."

And like every other children's book author, he made fun of himself on late-night TV on Tuesday in an interview with David Letterman. (Hey, the kids in California got to watch, at least.)

Among his advice to kids in a Top Ten list: "It's not whether you win or lose, it's how crazy smooth you look playing the game." How can you not love T.O.?

Father figure?

So who is going to show the first photos from the Hank Baskett-Kendra Wilkinson wedding?

People, OK Magazine, US Weekly or (drumroll, please) ... Jerry Springer?

Baskett, wide receiver for the Philadelphia Eagles, told a Philly TV station that Hugh Hefner will walk Wilkinson, a Playboy bunny, down the aisle for their nuptials June 27 at the Playboy Mansion.

Baskett added that he was attracted to Wilkinson's big heart and they share an affinity for children's charities.

"Hef is like a father to her, so he's going to be the one to give her away," Baskett said. "That's why I wanted his blessings and her mom's blessing."

Huh?

Wasn't Hef living, dating and "playing" with his bunnies? I'm not sure I want to understand how this incestuous lovefest among Hef, Wilkinson and Baskett works.

Love is a reality

Love, allegedly, is in the air for former NFL player Mark Gastineau's daughter, Brittny, and minor-league baseball player Doug Reinhardt.

Reinhardt made a series of guest appearances when he dated another reality show hottie, Lauren Conrad of "The Hills."

Seriously, there's got to be a better way to get minor-league baseball players some publicity. SHANNON J. OWENS IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

More jaws will drop as Dick Vitale and the other "analysts" get thicker skin.	Hopefully it'll feature a lot more profanity and choking.	Basketball melees will be confined to the broadcasters' booth.	Instead of flower pots, Knight will throw ESPN coffee mugs at staffers.

Congrats to Cubs manager Lou Piniella on his NL Manager of the Year award. If he's smart, he'll just give it back. Kind of like how the Cubs just gave the Dodgers a sweep in the playoffs.

Man(ager) of the year

Lou Piniella of the Cubs was named the National League Manager of the Year on Wednesday; his successor at Tampa Bay, Joe Maddon, won the AL award.

Piniella led the NL Central champion Cubs to the league's best record and beat out Charlie Manuel of the World Series champion Philadelphia Phillies to earn his third Manager of the Year award and first in the NL.

"I'm thrilled and I'm honored. I know there were a lot of managers in the National League who had good seasons," Piniella said from his home in Tampa.

The fiery Piniella also won in 1995 and 2001 with Seattle.

This time, he got 15 of 32 first-place votes and totaled 103 points to 67 for Manuel, listed first on eight ballots. Florida's Fredi Gonzalez finished third with five first-place votes and 48 points.

Two other managers garnered first-place votes: Joe Torre of the L.A. Dodgers (three) and Tony La Russa of the St. Louis Cardinals (one).

Piniella and his Cubs were swept in the first round of the playoffs for the second consecutive year.

Lou's brew

Piniella's season didn't end so well, so that got us thinking. What makes Piniella Manager of the Year material? We asked our Twitter followers (twitter.com/redeyechicago) to help us figure it out. Here are the unscientific results.

5% The way only he can mangle a word.

6% His crazy cool hair.

12% His calm demeanor.

31% The man can throw a mean base.

46% He can lead a team to the best NL record and look completely drunk in the process.

Couture

HIT AND RUN

UFC
Champ's wife goes to court
UFC champ Randy Couture's wife won a restraining order Wednesday against Affliction clothing business partner Todd Eugene Beard, alleging "threatening" actions and intimidation.

NBA
Nets offer free tickets, job fair to fans
The New Jersey Nets on Wednesday announced they are giving away 1,500 tickets to unemployed fans who submit resumes to the team. The resumes will be sent to 120 corporate sponsors and a couple of hundred firms that own season tickets.

BOXING
Dr. J III a knockout
Fledgling cruiserweight Julius "J" Erving III, 34, son of the Hall of Fame forward, made his pro debut in Atlanta on Friday with a one-round knockout of Kantrell Cameron. Doctor J took in all the action—all 2 minutes, 59 seconds of it.

HOMETOWN HITS

C Kyle Orton remained optimistic about playing Sunday against the Packers in Green Bay. "I'm preparing like I am [playing]," Orton said. "Just going to go from there, day in and day out." Orton returned to practice Wednesday in a limited role, his sprained right ankle taped.

B One day after undergoing surgery on his right thumb, Kirk Hinrich visited practice Wednesday with his arm in a sling.

» Drew Gooden didn't practice Wednesday and is a game-time decision with his sore right ankle.

C James Wisniewski is ahead of schedule as he rehabilitates from surgery to repair a torn ACL in his right knee. The Blackhawks' veteran defenseman, who injured his knee training during the off-season, has targeted Dec. 12 in Colorado for his comeback.

Wednesday's results

- » Southern Illinois 80, UMass 73
- » Central Michigan 33, Northern Illinois 30
- » Boston 2, Blackhawks 1 (OT shootout)

AND FINALLY...

» Notre Dame athletic director Jack Swarbrick says he believes the program is headed in the right direction under Charlie Weis. » The average ticket price for NFL playoff games will decrease by approximately 10 percent from last season. » Left-hander Damaso Marte and the New York Yankees agreed Wednesday to a $12 million, three-year contract. » Teresa Earnhardt and Chip Ganassi will combine their slumping NASCAR teams next season. The Associated Press has learned.

Drink your dinner

Seasonal cocktails you'll be thankful for

By Lisa Arnett

Ahh, Thanksgiving. The gluttonous feast. The kids' table. The digs from Grams about how you're still single. Ready to take the edge off already? Down one of these autumn-inspired libations to ease into your annual family meal—or skip the whole ordeal entirely and spend a week-end sipping your way through the holiday's classic dishes.

TURKEY

Tracking down a turkey cocktail is easier than you'd think. When you order the Wobble Stopper bloody mary ($9) during weekend brunch at The Fifty/50 (2047 W. Division St. 773-489-5050), just request that the pork bacon garnish be swapped out with turkey bacon and you're good to go. Besides two full slices of bacon, this bloody gets its flavor from a splash of porter and Svedka vodka infused with black beans, corn and tomatoes.

CRANBERRY SAUCE

A mere cosmo or cranberry-vodka won't demonstrate the proper reverence to this tart Thanksgiving staple; however, the Cranberry Pisco Sour ($10) at Sepia (123 N. Jefferson St. 312-441-1920) definitely does the job. Cranberry and orange-infused pisco and lime juice lend a satisfying pucker, while a foamy egg white crown dotted with artfully placed drops of Fee Brothers' bitters tops it off.

SWEET POTATOES

While your ornery relatives rehash their annual sweet potatoes vs. yams debate, distract yourself with thoughts of the Hot Potato Toddy ($10) at Sola (3868 N. Lincoln Ave. 773-327-3868). Pureed sweet potatoes serve as the base of this steamy treat, perked up with Chinese five spice and spiked with Captain Morgan spiced rum and ginger cream liqueur. Instead of a crown of melted marshmallows, this drink's topped with vanilla whipped cream and a cinnamon-pumpkin tuille cookie.

STUFFING

The Harvest Cocktail ($12) at Prosecco (710 N. Wells St. 312-951-9500) takes inspiration from stuffing's signature flavor: sage. Sage simple syrup combines with Grey Goose L'Orange vodka, Maker's Mark bourbon and Tuaca, an Italian vanilla-citrus liqueur. The finishing touch? A sage-infused ice cube.

MASHED POTATOES

The Chopin's Prelude ($11) at Graham Elliot (217 W. Huron St. 312-624-9975) is all potato, from first sip to last, thanks to Chopin vodka, appropriately distilled from potatoes. Rosemary simple syrup, lemon juice and a garnish of a pickled Yukon gold potato stuffed with chive cream cheese make this drink a fun play on the comfort-food classic. As for the gravy, you're on your own.

PUMPKIN PIE

Though the folks at Blue Line Lounge and Grill (1548 N. Milwaukee Ave. 773-395-3700) like to keep the ingredients of their classic Pumpkin Pie Martini under wraps, it's actually a simple combo of Kahlua, Hiram Walker pumpkin spice liqueur and cream that gives this dessert drink its richness. Served in a cinnamon sugar-rimmed glass, this off-menu sipper is on special for $5 until Thanksgiving.

Think your family has issues? In "Tester," a world-premiere, hard-boiled drama by local playwright Jennifer Dobby, a fictional Rogers Park woman is in a disintegrating marriage to a man who sells gift wrap out of his car trunk. As a result, she attempts to pursue her dream of becoming a cosmetologist with the help of her invalid brother. 7:30 p.m. Through Dec. 6. $20.

Wow 'em

UIC Pavilion, 1150 W. Harrison St. 773-275-5871.

Whoop it up at the 55th Annual American Indian Center of Chicago's Pow-Wow, where you can feast on Indian corn soup ($3), fry bread topped with blueberries ($4) and other delicacies. The cultural fest also includes dance competitions, singers and drummers dressed in full regalia, and an arts and crafts fair featuring more than 40 vendors. 6 p.m. Through Sunday. $12.

Game on

The Chicago Theatre, 175 N. State St.

The "Video Games Live" concert offers gamers a sound reason to take leave of their consoles. Listen in as orchestras and choirs perform music from eight popular games, including Halo, Final Fantasy and ultimate party-starter Guitar Hero, with rock concert effects such as projected video footage and synchronized lighting. Festivities kick off at 7 p.m. with try-it-yourself game demos and competitions, giveaways and a costume contest. A post-show meet-and-greet with game designers and Halo composer Michael Salvatori caps off the night. 8 p.m. $37.50-$75. 312-559-1212.

First laugh's on us

Zanies, 1548 N. Wells St. 312-337-4027.

Watch local comedians Haji Outlaw, Patti Vasquez, Michael Palascak and others put their jokes on the line for comic talent coordinator Eddie Brill of "Late Show with David Letterman" at the "Late Show" Talent Search, which could land a local jokester a spot on the show. 8:30 p.m. $22 plus a two-item food/beverage minimum.

Hot Woks
Cool Sushi
3930 N. Pulaski Road
773-282-1818

By Emily Hiser Lobdell

Their eats: Four-month-old pan-Asian noodle, rice and sushi restaurant Hot Woks Cool Sushi might just help put the Old Irving neighborhood on the city's dining map. Neighborhood folks already have discovered this newcomer, located right off the Pulaski/Irving Park Road exit on the Kennedy Expressway, and word is clearly getting out—the dining room fills quickly, especially on weekends.

Co-owner Lois Lee (her co-partner and chef is Woranat “Noom” Wathakeyanon, who used to work at Sushi Wabi and Lincoln Square’s Tank) says the restaurant’s logo, a yin and yang symbol “twisted and put in a box,” exemplifies the traditional yet slightly unconventional feel they aim to create. The restaurant, housed in a remodeled, two-story single-family home, boasts modern Asian decor and clean lines. “We’re like Pottery Barn gone Asian,” Lee says.

On the menu, you’ll find typical Thai, Chinese and Japanese noodle and rice dishes, as well as customary maki and nigiri. There also are a few surprises, including “untraditional egg rolls” stuffed with sausage ($3.95), and Fukudome maki, a jumbo roll filled with shrimp tempura, mayo, masago, avocado, chili sauce, cream cheese and scallions with tempura crumbs on the outside and wasabi mayo and sweet soy on top ($13.95).

Your drinks: There aren’t many options within walking distance of the restaurant, so plan ahead and pick up a bottle at Wine Discount Center (1826 N. Elston Ave. 773-489-3454) before you go.

Lee says she likes to pair a crisp Kim Crawford Sauvignon Blanc with the wok dishes, and the Wine Discount Center sells the 2008 vintage for a bargain $12.99.

Wine Discount manager Mike Baker suggests sparkling wine with sushi, especially if you like a lot of hot wasabi. He sells a bottle of Mumm Carte Classique Champagne non-vintage brut at what he claims is the lowest price in the country: $19.99.

David Archuleta
"David Archuleta"

There isn't much that a modern recording studio can't fix on the "American Idol" runner-up's first album, but when you think about who's at the music's core—a 17-year-old—the realization sets in that he's got his whole life and career ahead of him. "David Archuleta" isn't a half-bad starting point, and who better to sing about teenage love and longing than an actual teenager? The kid's got a future.

For Color Radio, it's all about live performances

By Michael Schmitt
FOR REDEYE

Color Radio knows how to succeed as an independent band in Chicago.

Beyond tirelessly promoting themselves, the band members carefully craft their music to fit a turbulent music business.

"We realize in this age, it's really all about the live performance," pianist Tohm Ifergan said. "So we really made sure every song we write comes out really clean on stage."

In the studio, where Color Radio spent most of the summer, the band worked extensively with producer Brian Zieske (The Academy Is, The Hush Sound) to craft songs that would work well on stage.

The product is "Feeling Like You Used To," the group's second

EP and a representation of Color Radio's indie-minded attitude.

"For local bands, it doesn't make sense to go out and record a full-length album and expect people to pay $10. We decided we're going to focus on writing and releasing singles and EPs through this year and the next," Ifergan said.

Music-wise, Color Radio picks up comparisons to Coldplay, Travis and Radiohead due to their melodic instrumentals and vocalist Johnathon Ifergan's Brit-pop influences. But what sets them apart is their attention to dynamics.

"Music today tends to be kind of flat, and all the levels are pushed up really loud like a TV commercial. We didn't want that. We wanted something like a live show," Tohm Ifergan said. "With varying dynamics, music feels more like a journey."

'Quantum of Solace' star Craig doesn't let arm injury crimp his dashing 007 style

By Matt Pais

"James Bond walks into a room wearing a sling" sounds like the beginning of a joke.

Yet during a recent interview with RedEye, James Bond—Daniel Craig—did walk into the room with his right arm in a sling. The international spy may be invincible, but the guy playing him isn't.

"I had to have shoulder reconstruction," Craig said. "I think it's an old injury, but two Bond movies over the past three years have not helped."

Bond hasn't lost a step in the new film, which opens Friday, "Quantum of Solace," a sequel of sorts that takes place right after the end of "Casino Royale." In "Quantum," 007 strives to avenge the death of his beloved Vesper Lynd (Eva Green) while teaming up with a mysterious Bolivian babe (Olga Kurylenko). He pursues Dominic Greene (Mathieu Almaric), an environmental bandit pretending to be a noted conservationist, who plans to overthrow the Bolivian government.

During the interview at the Trump International Hotel, Craig talked about superstardom, the difficulty of getting in shape to play Bond and how 007 would fare against Jason Bourne.

Nice sling. Who'd you have to kill on your way here?
Nobody yet ...

How come we never see Bond walking around in a sling?

Because I think it would be fairly dull, wouldn't it—if he was walking around with plaster on his foot? ... If you read the [Ian Fleming] books, it's funny because he always goes off on these missions and then [his boss] M gives him a holiday. But, invariably, he'll be on holiday and something else will happen. I'm kind of waiting for the holiday at the moment.

Daniel Craig sports an un-Bond sling during his recent Chicago interview.

Doesn't Bond ever wear something casual? He wears suits even when he knows he'll be in action.

I don't think he ever knows he's going to do action things. I think he dresses for the day, and he dresses as perfectly as he can, and if something happens, it happens. He doesn't think, "Well, I won't wear that today. I might get shot." I don't think that actually goes through his head. "I don't want to ruin that suit. I like that suit."

How much of a pain is it to get in shape for the role?

It's a pain in the ass, I can't tell you. I [bleepin'] hate it. There's two things. One is the narcissism attached to it, which I think the character is like that. I think he likes being fit. But the other one is I want to do as many of the stunts as I can, and the only way I can do that is to keep myself as fit as I possibly can. Because if I do get an injury, I'll recover quicker. It sounds like I really think about it all the time, but I don't. I just think: OK, go to the gym, rehearse, work. Go to the gym, rehearse, work.

What is James Bond fighting for, as the world changes?

Let's boil it down to what it is. It's about [the fact that] there's someone, somewhere out there—the bad guys—and I go out and get them. It's no more or less than that. I've never tried to instill the part and tried to do anything with the part to suggest that it should be anything other than that. Bond is loyal to the queen, let's say, but actually he's a civil servant so he's loyal to nobody really. In fact, the only people's he's loyal to are ... the people he's protecting. And there's something I think that's quite good about that. I would hope somewhere there is a section of the government that knows what's going on, and they're trying to get it right.

Do you miss the privacy you had before you became Bond?

Of course I do, yeah. Of course I do. What I do know is how much more important [it is] to me than it ever was. I had very little press interest in me back then [around the time of "Layer Cake," though you could] make a case and maybe something would happen and my name would appear in the paper and suddenly I'd get a paparazzi outside my house for some reason whatsoever. I didn't enjoy it then. I've always retained my privacy, but now I protect it even more. My friends and my family, they need to be looked after.

Daniel Craig aims for another box office hit with "Quantum of Solace."

'Quantum' leap

>> The title "Quantum of Solace" comes from a short story in the Ian Fleming collection "For Your Eyes Only," though the movie has an unrelated plot.

>> At 106 minutes, "Quantum of Solace" is easily the shortest Bond movie, though Daniel Craig shouldn't feel dissed—his first as 007, "Casino Royale," was the longest (144 minutes) in the nearly five-decade-long Bond series.

>> Craig's second tour of James Bond duty debuted in three European markets the weekend ending Nov. 3, shattering records by making an estimated $38.6 million.

Kurylenko in 'Quantum' SONY PICTURES

No sex, just Bonding

Olga Kurylenko isn't playing your usual Bond girl in the latest spy flick, "Quantum of Solace," which opens at 12:01 Friday.

The 28-year-old Ukrainian-born actress plays Camille, a Bolivian bombshell who teams up with 007—but not in bed. Camille is the first Bond girl who doesn't sleep with 007.

"It's a good thing," Kurylenko said. "It's good for a change."

Kurylenko talked to RedEye recently about Bond's hold on other ladies. M.P.

Why does Bond have such a way with the ladies?

He's such a charming guy, and he's such a hero because he always wins! It's a fantasy. A lot of movies are made to make us dream. It's kind of this perfect man ... I think women are attracted to these kind of guys who are strong and good-looking.

Could he still get girls if he drove a '92 Accord?

[Laughs] Well, for me, it doesn't matter what car a person drives. It's all about the connection.

What's missing

"Quantum of Solace" is the first direct sequel in the James Bond series. Star Daniel Craig told RedEye that since the storyline that started in "Casino Royale" is now complete, the series may return to some of its tropes from past Bond films.

"The next movie, maybe Q will come back into it," he said. "Maybe Moneypenny will come back into it. Maybe I'll say a few more of the old things that used to be said ['Shaken, not stirred' or 'Bond, James Bond.']. But for the moment, this is the deal, and we'll see."

Here are three things Bond has been missing since Craig took over as 007:

SEX

Bond has bedded a total of three women in the last two movies—a record dry spell for the secret agent's sex life.

"I think Bond has fully gone through the pain-and-suffering thing [with the death of his love Vesper] and can relax now," Craig said. "I see him having a little more fun the next time out."

GADGETS

Aside from a cool flash-screen tabletop computer, "Quantum" contains no gadgets. Thus, no need for Q, last played by John Cleese in 2002's "Die Another Day."

"The reality is that everyone these days has so many gadgets, what are you going to do to impress someone?" producer Barbara Broccoli said. "This Bond relies more on his own ability and wit."

MONEYPENNY

Bond's boss, M (Judi Dench), has plenty of screen time in "Quantum," but she must be doing her own filing these days. There's no sign of filmdom's most famous secretary.

"With 'Casino Royale,' Moneypenny and Q weren't in the [Ian Fleming] novel, so they weren't in the movie," Broccoli said. "And 'Quantum' is a continuation. When the story dictates the need to introduce those characters, we will."

Per Craig's suggestion, we ask: Could Gwyneth Paltrow work for both Bond and Iron Man?

Indie filmmakers take projects directly to audiences—by van

By Stephen Markley

FOR REDEYE

What is a 24-year-old who has made a self-financed college buddy movie without a distribution deal to do to get his movie seen?

For Todd Sklar, the answer is simple: Take it to the people.

Sklar and three other filmmakers are crisscrossing the country by van in an effort to drum up populist support for their movies. The Range Life Entertainment tour comes to the Gene Siskel Film Center beginning Thursday.

Sklar's film, "Box Elder," revolves around the day-to-day travails of four college roommates, heavily concerned with beer, women and sandwiches.

"When I started, I wanted to make these serious, complex films, but then I realized I wasn't good at that, so I went back to comedy," Sklar, from Chicago, told RedEye this week. "This is a total enjoy-your-youth type picture."

Financed on-the-cheap with credit cards and starring his friends from an improv comedy troupe, "Box Elder" is one of four movies on the Range Life Entertainment Tour.

The other filmmakers on the tour—and their projects—are Christopher Jaymes and "In Memory of My Father," about a dying movie magnate; Robert Byington and "RSO," a black comedy about a registered sex offender; and JJ Lask and "On the Road with Judas."

"I took the film to Sundance," Lask said, "and was shocked to find that every movie was made for about $3 million. Ours was under $300,000."

Lask adapted "On the Road with Judas" from his own book, transforming it into a meta-narrative in the style of Michael Gondry or Charlie Kaufman films (think "Adaptation" or "Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind"). In it, characters from the book are interviewed alongside their real-life counterparts in a fictional setting.

"It's kind of like if you had Julia Roberts sitting beside Erin Brockovich sitting beside Steven Soderbergh," Lask said.

The tour will bring the films, filmmakers and actors to 27 major cities and college campuses in a do-it-yourself marketing campaign that may become the wave of the future for independent filmmakers.

"Rather than just having a movie play in New York and L.A. and then disappear, it's a way to actually connect with the audience you're trying to target," Sklar said. "Whenever I see bands play, I find one of the coolest things is just hanging out in the bar afterward. That's something we wanted to replicate."

Lask said the current method of distributing independent films isn't working.

"Filmmakers don't make money, producers don't make money, and no one sees the movies," he said. "So we've got to find another way, and it's people like Todd, who have the energy and are willing to do the hard work that will succeed."

Sklar said the group has found a great deal more success taking the films from city to city by van than had they sat around waiting for a distribution deal.

"The reaction has been incredible," he said. "I'm just hoping to do well enough that I have a chance to make another movie at some point, but I'm having so much fun right now."

Metromix movies producer Matt Pais reviewed "Box Elder" earlier this year. Below is an excerpt from the full review you can read at metromix.com.

"Beautifully versed in the Language of Dude, 'Box Elder' will take you back to your days of no responsibility—or just when you blew it off. ... The film nails the casual dynamics of male friends who care more about sandwiches, video games and unwritten rules between guys than homework or personal hygiene."

Bright economic spot: Air, hotel prices drop

Los Angeles Times

With the economy in distress, there might be no cheaper time to travel than this winter as a sharp drop in demand forces airlines, hotels and cruise companies to slash fares, cut rates and lower fees.

In what might be a silver lining during a season of economic angst, travelers are finding some of the best deals in recent memory, from half-priced resorts to rock-bottom airfares.

“These are glorious times for travelers who have a job and the money,” said Chris McGinnis, a travel consultant.

For air travelers, planes still figure to be crowded because airlines have been cutting flights to slash costs and keep fares high. But empty seats are starting to crop up, and that’s alarming carriers. To fill planes, airlines are going to have to clip fares, analysts said.

“From now until March 15, there could be some really unprecedented bargains,” said Joe Brancatelli, a business travel consultant who runs the Web site joesentme.com.

More airfare sales are expected this week. McGinnis, who also writes a travel blog at the Web site youmustbetrippin.com, said this winter could turn out to be a “golden age for travel.” With fewer flights, more planes are getting to their destinations on time, according to the site flightstats.com, which tracks airline performance.

Farecast.live.com, a travel Web site that tries to predict the direction of airfares, said travelers who wait are finding better deals. A recent check of airfares found that plane tickets for the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays had fallen below last year’s levels.

“This is a dramatic change from August and September, when fares were more than 30 percent above last year,” said Nick Leahy, a spokesman for the Web site.

BARGAIN TRIPS

CRUISES

“It looks like for January and February, we’re seeing the lowest cruise fares since post-Sept. 11,” said Mike Driscoll, editor of the industry newsletter Cruise Week. Since August, he said, prices for cruises in the Caribbean, Mexico and other winter destinations have fallen 8 percent to 10 percent on average.

VACATION PACKAGES

Vacationing in Hawaii has become cheaper. You can buy multiday trips for less than $1,000, including airfare. So few people seem to be traveling this winter that Walt Disney World in Orlando has been offering three free hotel nights and three days of theme park admission for booking a four-day stay.

HOTELS

In Las Vegas, which has been hard-hit by the travel downturn, one hotel recently offered rooms for $1 a night. Some resorts in Mexico have slashed hotel rates by half or thrown in free meals.

OVERSEAS TRAVEL

Europe is a bargain these days, considering that with lower fares and a stronger dollar, it’s about 25 percent cheaper to take a vacation there this winter than last year, said Simon Talling-Smith, an executive vice president with British Airways. The airline is expected to launch a major fare sale this week.

Register fingerprints, skip passport lines

Chicago Tribune

For $100 and a copy of your fingerprints, U.S. citizens flying from abroad into O'Hare can skip passport-checking lines and proceed almost directly to baggage claim.

The Global Entry program, unveiled at O'Hare last month by U.S. Customs and Border Protection, is designed to let travelers get through the airport faster but also affords a benefit for the Department of Homeland Security: It makes it easier to track who is coming into the country.

Global Entry has been rolled out this year at seven of the nation's busiest airports and will expand to 20 within a year. The nearly 5,000 people who have enrolled nationally are able to pass through security at automated kiosks instead of waiting in line to have their passports stamped. The process at the kiosk takes about a minute and involves having your photo taken, letting both index fingers be read on a scanner and answering a few questions on a computer screen. Passports are not stamped for people in Global Entry, and customs declarations are done on the kiosk screen.

For more information, go to globalentry.gov.

Only travelers deemed “low risk” are eligible, he said, and must undergo background checks. Any criminal conviction—even misdemeanors—is grounds for rejection. The $100 fee is good for five years.

In the first month of the program at O'Hare, more than 50 people have used the kiosks stamped with the Department of Homeland Security logo.

Paul Sevin, 50, drove five hours from his home in the Detroit suburbs to enroll in Global Entry at O'Hare last month. The engineer said he flies internationally about 30 times a year. When flying home, he usually has had to schedule a three- or four-hour layover in another American city to have enough time to pass through customs. He figures he can stop that now.

“This is the program of my dreams,” he said.

Customs officials acknowledged that some people might be wary of leaving their fingerprints on file with the government, but Sevin said he didn't mind.

“I have nothing to fear,” he said. “The only people who do either have issues with their background or with their government. I don't fear my government—yet.”

EVERYONE'S A WINNER

Anthony Edwards didn't want to be paid for his appearance on "ER." Instead, he asked Warner Brothers to donate to the charity he works with, Shoe4Africa, which is raising money to build the largest children's hospital in Africa. The production company donated $125,000 to the hospital, an amount matched by director Steven Spielberg. "ER" producer John Wells kicked in $50,000. "It was really a win/win for me all of the way," Edwards said. To learn more about the charity, go to shoe4africa.org.

He's back—and loving Chicago

Anthony Edwards left "ER" six years ago, but he still gets recognized as Dr. Mark Greene.

"There isn't a day where some little old lady doesn't stop me [and says] 'You ruined my Thursday nights when you left,'" Edwards told reporters recently.

Those ladies in New York, where Edwards now lives, will get to see the good doctor again at 9 p.m. Thursday, when Edwards stars in flashback scenes that explain why ER chief Cate Banfield (Angela Bassett) decided to get a job at County General.

Bassett and Edwards share several riveting scenes in the emotional episode, part of the long-running drama's 15th and final season. Edwards, who is one of several former "ER" stars returning this season, left the show after Season 8, when his character died.

"But I'm very much alive in this episode," Edwards joked, adding that he wasn't concerned about looking older in the flashback scenes than he did when he was a series regular.

"Luckily I aged less in the last six years than I did from the [1994] pilot to when I left [in 2002]. When I look at those pictures I go 'Oh my God, I was a baby when I was 32,'" he said. "So I've aged less from 40 to 46."

Returning to the L.A. set for the four-day shoot brought back good memories, Edwards said. After about a half hour of being on set, he said it felt as if he'd never left.

"And then, you know, [I] followed up with some time in Chicago, which was great," said the actor and avid runner, who has raced in the Chicago Marathon three times. ("It's nice and cold and flat.")

"It was really like going back to high school and in the best way," Edwards said. "It was like going back to your favorite class, having your favorite teacher and there was no test that day."

REDEYE CLOSE-UP

Viewers will see Anthony Edwards and Angela Bassett along the Chicago River in Thursday's episode, and Bassett at the lakefront near Ohio Street Beach. They also will see a RedEye box that, for some unknown reason, holds the April 3, 2006, issue shown here.

You probably just clenched up thinking about it.

Get touchy for your health

Guys, how well do you know your body? I'm sure you have been "exploring" it since your mid-teens—and probably still do on a semi-regular basis. But do you know if you are in good sexual health? I am not talking about potency or virility or stamina: I am talking about making sure everything is in ship-shape from head to toe.

Have you ever checked for testicular cancer? Have you ever gotten a full prostate exam? You probably just clenched up thinking about it. But it's important for men to be informed about their sexual health.

Men notoriously are bad about going to the doctor, especially when something seems "off" in the nether regions. They get embarrassed and try to power through it, ignoring signs of potentially larger problems. This is not a good idea.

That's why the guys at feastoffools.net (a highly popular Chicago-produced gay podcast) are hosting a free live podcast forum at the Center on Halsted on Tuesday. The forum will address STDs, sexual health and wellness, and a variety of other important topics relating to men's health issues.

The panel of experts includes porn star J.C. Carter, Jim Picket from the AIDS Foundation of Chicago, and Dr. Will Wong from the Chicago department of public health. If you have ever listened to the Feast of Fools podcast, then you know that the hosts, Marc and Fausto, are sure to make the event extremely entertaining and informative. (Go to feastoffools.net to register.)

Most men don't give themselves exams as often as they should, if at all. Next time you are in the shower, cop a feel. Or get your boyfriend or girlfriend involved and make a game of it.

According to the American Cancer Society, 8,000 men on average are diagnosed with testicular cancer each year. A friend's brother was diagnosed with testicular cancer a few years ago and subsequently had to have surgery because he didn't go to the doctor soon enough. Had he seen the doctor earlier, he may have been spared that experience.

It's not just testicular cancer that you should be concerned about. The ACS also notes that more 186,000 men are diagnosed yearly with prostate cancer. But check this out: Australian researchers have found that men who masturbate on average five times a week or more are less likely to develop prostate cancer. If that's not incentive enough, I don't know what is.

So listen up, guys. You don't want to assume that because you are young and in shape that you are 100 per cent OK. Lance Armstrong was in his best shape ever when he was diagnosed with testicular cancer at the age of 25.

Even if you can't make the event, consider downloading the podcast. It might save your life.

Ryan Reynolds never at a loss for marathon tales

Don't get us wrong, running a marathon is no simple task. And it's a great thing to do—especially if you're running one for charity.

But Ryan Reynolds, who ran the New York City marathon this month, talks about it a lot. A whole lot.

Through blog comments and interviews, the “Definitely, Maybe” actor and husband to Scarlett Johansson told us all about his preparation for the race, how nervous he was about finishing the race and how great it was to finally get to the end of the race.

On the Rachael Ray show that aired Wednesday, Reynolds was at it again, telling Ray about running to raise awareness for Parkinson's Disease, which his father suffers from. Reynolds ran on Team Fox, named after vocal Parkinson's research advocate Michael J. Fox.

“I see this Team Fox banner up ahead, and I look to my left and there I saw Michael,” Reynolds said on the show, according to usmagazine.com excerpts. “My dad, for I think fairly obvious reasons, couldn't be there at the marathon. I would have loved him to be there, but Michael really was a kind of surrogate for that for me, and to just high-five him and have that moment really carried me through.”

With a heart that big, who can blame Reynolds for gabbing so much about the race? Here's a look back at some of his comments leading up to and after the big day.

THE BEGINNING

» In September, Reynolds released a statement that he would be running for Team Fox. “I am proud to be a part of this team of dedicated and motivated people who are getting out there and making a difference.”

NIPPLEGATE

» In October, Reynolds wrote an open letter to The Huffington Post, humorously pointing out his lack of qualifications. “I am not a runner,” he wrote. “I am a running joke.” He said he was amazed by the sight of marathoners coming in to finish with bleeding nipples.

» He joked later in the month to People magazine about his lack of preparation. “I would sooner be prime minister of the moon than run another marathon,” Reynolds say. “I've been really lucky. I didn't have any toenails fall off or anything disgusting like that. I still have all three nipples.”

THE FINISH

» Reynolds finished the NYC marathon in 3 hours and 50 minutes—and then talked to reporters, including People. “I'm still standing. I'm very excited about that,” he said. “It was an incredible experience.” He said Fox was an inspiration. “When I saw Michael J. Fox on Fifth Avenue, I gained about 15 pounds in goose bumps. ... It kind of pushed me through the last six miles or so.”

THE AFTERPARTY

» Reynolds popped in on Rachael Ray's syndicated cooking and talk show Wednesday—with surprise guest Fox (above), who gave him some marriage advice. “Just remember this,” Fox said, according to people.com excerpts. “If a man says something in the forest and his wife isn't there to hear him, he's still wrong.”

Abdul fan dies

A fan of Paula Abdul who auditioned on "American Idol" in Season 5 was found dead outside the "AI" judge's home Tuesday night, the AP reports.

Police have identified the woman as Paula Goodspeed, whose performance of "Proud Mary" was mocked by judges. Her body was found in her car, which featured a license plate that read "ABL LV," the AP reported. Abdul, who was not home at the time, said in a statement: "I am deeply saddened and shocked. ... My heart and prayers go out to her family."

Now starring: Timbaland

He's been on practically every recent pop hit. So what's next for star producer Timbaland? The movies. The producer's Mosley Media Group is teaming with Effie T. Brown's Duly Noted Inc. to produce "Vinyl," the story of five young women facing life-altering decisions about their relationships with members of a rock band, billboard.com reported. The hit maker behind "SexyBack" will executive produce.

Rapper's delight

Ludacris, whose new album drops in a couple of weeks, says he wants to bring some guys from his Southern hometown on tour, vh1.com reported. "I haven't confirmed anything yet," he said. "It's little talks here and there. But I'll put it out there: I would love to do a tour where it's me, T.I. and [Young] Jeezy. Me, Tip and Jeezy would be outrageous. But nothing is confirmed yet." Stay tuned.

QUOTED

"I'm like an alcoholic. It is like, I don't care if I cry, I don't care if I am fat, I am just going to do it for one more week, one more month, and then when I see how much good it is doing her and I can't stop."

NOTED

Angelina Jolie's rep, Geyer Kosinski, denies rumors the actress is pregnant again mere months after giving birth to twins.

DEMOTED

Major 'Development'?

"Arrested Development" fans, rejoice. Your fave TV show is becoming a movie.

That's according to star Jeffrey Tambor, anyway, who on Tuesday told collider.com that the much-rumored film is a go. Tambor said he talked to "AD" creator Mitch Hurwitz last week, who said it was on.

Tambor didn't know any specifics about the project, but said that fans can be sure it's happening.

"When the writer calls you, and the director, and the executive producer calls you, it's a pretty good sign," Tambor said in the interview, which you can watch for yourself at Collider.

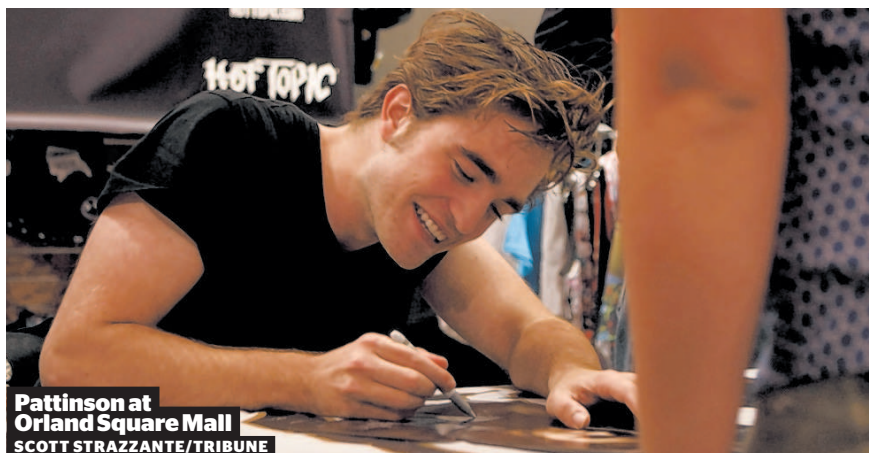

Tambor said he's looking forward to revisiting "Arrested Development" and his character, George Bluth Sr. "We want to close that," he said. "We want to bring that all to fruition."

That bites

Maybe it's the vampires who should be scared of us.

"Twilight" star Robert Pattinson—whose appearance at a San Francisco mall earlier this week sparked a mini-riot by his tween fans—had another crowd of rabid fans waiting for him Wednesday at Orland Square Mall in Orland Park, the Tribune reported.

Promoters planned to sell 500 admittance wristbands Wednesday morning for the Pattinson meet-and-greet. By midnight Tuesday the crowd waiting outside had far exceeded 500.

Say what?

Did she or didn't she?

The Internet is buzzing with reports that Lindsay Lohan, in an interview posted on accesshollywood.com, referred to President-elect Obama as our "first colored president."

The word in question sounded muffled when RedEye checked the video. Interviewer Maria Menounos does not appear to question Lohan, an Obama supporter, about what she said. LiLo spokesfolks did not immediately return calls for comment, according to the AP.

A statement issued by "Access Hollywood" said, "We believe the word in question that Ms. Lohan used was unintelligible."

Thanks for clearing that up.

Hey, ladies

Kanye West is looking for the right girl.

But "super-calculating" women on the prowl need not apply, says the Chicago rapper.

"I want to have kids," he tells People magazine. "But I want to have the right girl too—someone who really cares about me."

The past year has been a tough one for the "Love Lockdown" singer. Last year, his mother, Donda, died due to complications with cosmetic surgery. Then he broke up with his fiancée.

"It's lonely at the top," he said at a London listening party for his new album, according to people.com. "Losing my mom, having no woman in my life to support me—I feel like I'm on my own and can only express it through my music."

The digit

$64 million

Estimated amount "American Idol" has given in grants to six U.S. and international charities from contributions to its "Idol Gives Back" fundraising event, the AP reports.
